

Day 3 - Hobbies cost money

“At least its not drugs.

? Finishing Up at the Store

View of the new cash desk, with everything assembled and ready to go.

Went to the store, did some cable management, and then took a lot of pictures of the store and how everything is setup. Mostly just boring work nothing crazy.

Chatted with Joe the foreman for a bit, then delivered some stuff to the Pseudio across the mall and then left.

Inside the store with no stock in it yet (or speakers).

? Lunch!

Decided to grab lunch again at Chick-Fil-A because it was so good last time, and I had the same thing except I got a large sweet iced tea. So good I had to have more. But there is another reason I got the tea. I wanted to drive around Ontario a bit.

A picture of heaven on earth.

I got in the car and more or less muddled on my phone a bit trying to find a location to go. I know I wanted to go down to Panda Hobby, a nice little hobby store I bought online from one day and I wanted to see their stock of Gunpla.

Without finding much else to do I said "fuck it" and ventured down anyway. Drive was long and boring. Highways are so straight here its insane. Its crazy to me how the highway is so straight but the entire highway is only 100km/h. Like at least bump it up to 120.

? Gundam

Once I got down there, I was SHOCKED at what they had in stock. I found at least 10 of them I wanted including an original Zaku I. I was overwhelmed at their stock. But I knew exactly what model I wanted. The RG Nu Gundam to go with my RG Sazabi. That and the Razer (not the gaming company) gate remover tool set. I've been eyeing it for a while now and really wanted it. Plus 2 sets of 2 action bases totaling 4 complete action bases. They won't hold the larger models but they will holder the smaller RG models which is exactly what I was looking for.

Really cool Red Comet head next too the unicorn. It was quite big as well.

